Tips for Coping with Anxiety of COVID-19 during Pregnancy and Following Birth

Focus on what you can control

It's natural in times of crisis to experience some anxiety and for your mind to wander to what can't be controlled. Unfortunately we can't control the actions of others or the future but we can control our own responses.

Stay connected and engaged

Find ways to stay socially connected to people and activities during physical isolation. It is so important to maintain well being. The way you modify connecting with family and friends may vary.

Keep active

Consider going for a walk with your baby or your partner, or participate in a free movement class on YouTube. Keeping motivated to be physical active is easier if you include someone else.

Take a moment

Take a moment to notice how you are feeling. Notice your breath and mindfully take a moment to slow your breathing. This will help calm your body and your mind.

Focus on what matters

Stay in touch with your values, the things that matter most to you. Your personal values may include family, love, caring, honesty and more.

Seek assistance if you are struggling

If you're expecting or have a new baby and are struggling to cope, feeling flat, sad or depressed, our Online Treatment Programs may help.

In amidst these challenging and stressful times, there are also many stories of strength and hope being shared around the world. Taking the time to focus on these stories can be heart-warming and uplifting, and allow us to remain positively connected to others in our community.
